

In 2024, a group of students from a school in California, United States, went on an educational and cultural exchange journey in three cities in China: Beijing, Suzhou, and Shanghai.

For Ian Sierra, a boy in the group, this was his first time traveling abroad, and he felt nervous before the trip. “I should behave well, because every move is the image (形象) of the whole group, my school, and my country.”

During the trip, Sierra and his friends were excited that they opened their minds, tried new things, and talked with Chinese people actively. Sierra visited places of interest and tried local food, but the part he liked best about the trip was the exchange and homestay (家庭寄宿) program at Beijing No. 4 High School International Campus (BHSFIC), where he spent over two days. “My homestay partner, his parents, and everyone else were very welcoming and kind. I felt like I had become part of an interconnected (有联系的) community,” he said. For Sierra, the weeklong trip even influenced his plan for the future job. “I used to consider becoming a math teacher in the US. Now I’m planning to work in Beijing or Shanghai.” Gong Siyong, a student at BHSFIC and Sierra’s homestay partner, said that an exchange experience was very surprisingly different from simply touring a country. “Through our time together, I’ve come to realize the students from both schools have their different personalities (性格) and qualities (品质). We have more similarities than differences, and those differences can be understood,” said Gong.

During the Warring States Period (475 - 221 BC), King Zhao of the State of Yan wanted to get talented people to work for him. When he asked a scholar (有学问的人) named Guo Wei for advice, Guo told him the story of buying horse bones with 500 pieces of gold.

There was once a king who wanted a special kind of horse. This horse could run 1,000 li a day. It was called qianlima. He sent many people to find these horses and buy them for him. After three years, nobody found him such a horse.

One day, someone new volunteered to help. Within three months, he heard about a qianlima. He rushed (赶上) to find it, but the horse had already died. Still, he bought the bones of the horse with 500 pieces of gold.

The king was very angry. "What I want is a live horse, not the bones of a dead horse!"

The man answered calmly, "Imagine this. You are willing to pay a high price for a dead horse, let alone a live one. This shows people you truly wish to buy the horses. Just wait and the horses you want will come very soon."

Indeed, within a year, many qianlima owners brought their horses to the king. Guo told the king that he could see himself as the bones of the horse. Gianni has a very special kind of memory. He explains in his own words: “It’s a kind of memory that is connected to what I see. It means that every idea I learn, everything I read, becomes a part of me. Normally, a person who doesn’t have this gift, and who hasn’t studied memory, tends to just forget things—even an entire book. Not me.” Gianni says that his “gift”, or special ability, he has memorized more than 250 books!

Memorizing over 250 books is surprising, but it’s not the only surprising thing about Gianni. He says that he can remember every detail of every day of his life. He also says that he can remember these details from the time he was less than one day old!

Researchers are now studying how memory and learning change the brain. Some research already shows that a great memory may not depend on the right DNA only. It seems that everyone can remember more if they try. According to Dr. Malgaroli, “If you really need to use your brain to store some kind of information, you have this ability. It’s just a matter of exercise.” So, practice and exercising the brain can improve the memory!

The same idea is true for Gianni. His gift is just only part of his success. Since the age of 11, he’s been training his brain to remember more and more. He practices continuously to improve the power of his memory. Gianni thinks about memory, and works on it, all the time. He has even memorized a whole series of historical books!

Gianni believes his memory is mainly because of his very hard work. He even holds classes to teach others how to improve their memories. In his classes, Gianni shows people how to organize their memories and how to “remember to remember”. “I think the only problem with memory is the correct order. There’s a lot of brain space, so I think there are no limits.”

In the village of Kentucky, there lived a young girl named Amanda. She moved here for only 2 weeks. Her closest friends were far from her. Amanda kept herself busy for hours by walking around the grassy fields nearby, enjoying the natural beauty along them. On the weekend, Amanda would even volunteer on farms to help take care of sheep, cows and horses.

Still, it was easy for Amanda to feel lonely in her big house. One day, just as Amanda was about to leave and spend time walking around, she saw a cat jump onto the porch (门廊). Even though the cat looked dirty, it was beautiful with bright blue eyes.

Amanda's feeling of surprise quickly gave way to a feeling of pity. Thinking of what she could offer the cat, Amanda hurried to the kitchen and prepared two bowls: one filled with fish and the other with water. After sniffing (嗅) them carefully, the cat began to eat the food hungrily. Once it finished its meal, the cat ran away into the thick grass and disappeared.

From that day, the cat would appear on the porch every day in the morning and beg for food and water, and Amanda would always be there ready. Their relationship started to deepen as Amanda enjoyed regularly seeing her new “furry (毛茸茸的) neighbours”. The cat was too nervous to be taken indoors, but it was comfortable with Amanda gradually.

However, one day, everything took a different turn in the morning. Amanda brought a bowl of fish near the porch and waited for the cat as usual, but it didn't appear. The next day, and the day after that, the cat didn't show up either. She stepped into the thick grass where the cat usually went and searched carefully.

Du Mengran, a great Chinese scientist known as “Deep-Sea Diver” by Nature, has become a role model for many young people. She was born in a small city in Shandong Province. From an early age, she was curious about the ocean and often asked her parents questions about sea creatures and the deep sea. This childhood passion planted the seed for her future scientific career.

Du’s love for science led her to study hard. She did well in math and biology at school. After graduating from high school, she went to a famous university to study marine science. During her college years, she not only mastered professional knowledge but also joined the school's marine exploration club. She spent countless weekends in the laboratory, analyzing seawater samples and studying the habits of deep-sea organisms. Even when experiments failed repeatedly, she never lost heart.

Du Mengran's success comes from her hard work. Her work focuses on deep-sea diving and how to explore the ocean. She studies the systems of fluids that seep from the sea floor, and even came up with a new idea about how deep-sea creatures live. This idea has helped make underwater technologies better. Up to December 2025, she has gone on over 30 deep-sea dives. She has used China's own underwater vehicles like “Jiaolong”, “Shenhai Yongshi” and “Fendouzhe”. In 2022, she started a program to explore the deepest parts of the world's oceans. She led teams from China and Indonesia to discover two new hot-water activity areas in the Java Trench. In 2024, she helped create a machine that can read DNA in the deep sea. In 2025, she also tested China's first deep-sea gamma radiation detector.

On December 8th, Du was named one of the 2025 Top 10 Scientists by Nature magazine’s website. This is a great honor for her and Chinese science. Her contributions make the world know more about China’s deep-sea research strength.

Jane Goodall, the world-famous primatologist（灵长类动物学家）and conservationist（环保主义者）, passed away at the age of 91 on October 1, 2025, in California, US. She was on a speaking tour at that time. The Jane Goodall Institute told people about her death. It praised her for changing science and devoting her life to protecting nature.

Goodall was born in London in 1934. When she was a child, she loved animals very much. In 1960, when she was 26, she went to Tanzania's Gombe Stream National Park to study chimpanzees（黑猩猩）— and she didn't even have formal scientific training. Her patience finally brought good results: she became the first person to see chimps make tools. For example, chimps use twigs to "fish" for termites（白蚁）. This discovery changed how humans understand animals. Before that, people thought only humans could make tools.

In the next 60 years, Goodall's research found more interesting facts about chimps: they have different personalities, they feel emotions like joy and sadness, and they form strong family connections. Later in her life, she turned her attention to helping protect the environment around the world. She started the Jane Goodall Institute and set up "Roots and Shoots"—a program that helps young people take action to protect the environment.

“Where’s Papa going with that ax (斧头)?” said Fern to her mother as they were setting the table for breakfast.

“He went to the pig house,” replied Mrs Arable. “Some pigs were born last night. ”

“I don’t understand why he needs an ax. ” continued Fern, who was only eight years old.

“Well,” said her mother, “ one of the pigs is a runt (小不点儿). It’s very small and weak, and it will never amount to (成为) anything. So your father has decided to do away with it. ”

“Do away with it?” screamed Fern. “You mean he will kill it? Just because it’s smaller than the others?”

Mrs Arable put a pitcher (罐) of cream on the table. “Don’t shout, Fern!” she said. “Your father is right. The pig will die anyway. ”

Fern pushed a chair out of the way and ran outdoors. She caught up with her father.

“Please don’t kill it!” she cried. “It’s unfair. ”

Mr Arable stopped walking.

“Fern,” he said gently, “you will have to learn to control yourself. ”

“Control myself?” shouted Fern. “This is a matter of life and death, but you talk about controlling myself. ” Tears ran down her cheeks and she took hold of the ax and tried to pull it out of her father’s hand.

“Fern,” said Mr Arable, “I know more about raising pigs than you do. A weakling makes trouble. Now go home!”

“But it’s unfair,” cried Fern. “The pig couldn’t help being born small, could it? If I had been very small at birth, would you have killed me?”

Mr Arable smiled. “Certainly not. ” he said, looking down at his daughter with love. “But this is different. A little girl is one thing, while a little runty pig is another. ”

“I see no difference,” replied Fern, still holding on to the ax. “This is the most terrible case of unfairness that I have ever heard. ”

A strange look came over Mr Arable’s face. He seemed almost ready to cry himself.

“All right,” he said. “You go back to the house and I will bring the runt when I come back. I’ll let you look after the baby pig. Then you’ll see what trouble a pig can be. ”

Half an hour later, Mr Arable returned to the house, carrying a box under his arm.

“Put it on her chair!” said Mrs Arable. Mr Arable set the box down at Fern’s place. Fern came slowly down the stairs. Her eyes were red from crying. As she got closer to her chair, the box wobbled

(摇晃), and there was a scratching noise. Fern looked at her father. Then she opened the box. There, inside, looking up at her, was the newborn pig. It was a white one. The morning light shone through its ears, turning them pink.

I love to read. I can't even remember when I started loving it. I grew up in a really small and far-away village. Most people there were farmers, and some of them never went to school. My dad somehow got some education. He read a lot and loved reading novels. But he always told me to read textbooks instead.

At first, I was kind of sad. Textbooks didn't seem as interesting as the exciting stories. But I trusted my dad, so I started reading textbooks hard.

Science textbooks let me know about the world around me. I learned how plants grew. This was very useful in our village because most people were farmers. I told the farmers what I learned, like how to plant crops better. At first, they didn't trust me, but later they were surprised because their crops grew better. I was so proud, and I knew that knowledge was really powerful.

When I read English textbooks, it was like opening a new door. I learned new words and grammar rules. With them, I could make sentences to express my ideas. After learning some descriptive words and sentence patterns, I could vividly describe to foreign visitors how the wildflowers dotted the fields like colorful stars in our village.

History textbooks took me to different times and places. I learned what people in the past did, how they solved difficulties, and what the great achievements were. I realized our village's story was just a small part of a long history. This made me deepen my understanding of our village's past.

Because my dad made me read textbooks, I got a good education. I went to an excellent school in the city. The knowledge from textbooks was like a key that opened the door to new chances. It was the base for my growing up. It helped me reach for my dreams, even if they seemed impossible when I was in that small village.

Every Sunday morning, Amy goes for a walk in a park near her home. Her favourite place is a lake in the center of the park. Every time she walks by the lake, she sees an old lady sitting there with a small cage beside her.

One morning, she was so curious that she walked over to the old lady. As she got closer, Amy could see there were three turtles slowly walking around the bottom of the cage. The old lady was holding a fourth one in her hand and carefully brushing it.

“Excuse me.” Amy said. “May I ask what you’re doing with these turtles?”

The boy was so angry that he wrote a letter to the wind. "Please don't blow down my barrels." After seeing that, his father asked the boy with a smile, "Can the wind read your letter?" The boy said. "I don't know. I have no choice but to make this request (请求)." "

The next morning, when the little boy ran to check the barrels, he found that the barrels were blown here and there again. The little boy felt very unhappy and cried. His father came and said kindly, "Son, don't be sad. We may have no way to deal with the wind, but we can have our own ways to beat the wind." Then the little boy dried his tears and thought over and over. Finally, he thought of an idea. He filled the empty barrels with water. After that, he went home worriedly.

The third morning, the little boy put on his clothes in a hurry and ran out. He was excited to find the barrels were placed in good order. The little boy smiled happily and told his father. "It's a very simple way to make the barrels heavier." The boy's father smiled and nodded his head.

Cleaning up the table, I caught sight of small round plastic pieces. I discovered they were the tops or covers of color markers I had kept on the table. The only difference was that someone got those covers and chewed (咀嚼) them into shapelessness. On another part of the table, I saw the color markers dried up without covers. I was almost sure I knew who had done it and I could not understand the reasons behind his actions.

As I was thinking about my discovery, my annoyance and anger gradually went away when I remembered that as a child, I did several strange things that must have made my mother mad. I cut our shoes, I chewed pens and pencils, and I wrote and drew pictures on walls and destroyed many things at home. The mind of a child is curious with the spirit of exploration, trying to understand and test the limits (限制) of many things. Of course, it can be costly, but what is growing up if no mistakes are made?

We call it paying the school fees of life. If a child plays with a hot iron and it burns him, he will probably not go near the iron again. Sometimes I watch the children in my neighborhood playing dangerous games. Sometimes I tell them not to do it, but sometimes I let it pass. Children may not want to be told to stop riding as fast as they want until someone has fallen off their bike. A child will not listen when his parents ask him to get down from the tree until he has fallen down. However, if the behavior is deadly, you should stop it in time.

Creativity is valuable. And this is why we should encourage children to remain creative rather than just receive everything they have known and seen. Allow children to make mistakes, but this must be followed with supervision (监督), monitoring, and correction.

In 2024, a group of students from a school in California, United States, went on an educational and cultural exchange journey in three cities in China: Beijing, Suzhou, and Shanghai.

For Ian Sierra, a boy in the group, this was his first time traveling abroad, and he felt nervous before the trip. “I should behave well, because every move is the image (形象) of the whole group, my school, and my country.”

During the trip, Sierra and his friends were excited that they opened their minds, tried new things, and talked with Chinese people actively. Sierra visited places of interest and tried local food, but the part he liked best about the trip was the exchange and homestay (家庭寄宿) program at Beijing No. 4 High School International Campus (BHSFIC), where he spent over two days. “My homestay partner, his parents, and everyone else were very welcoming and kind. Gianni has a very special kind of memory. He explains in his own words: “It’s a kind of memory that is connected to what I see. It means that every idea I learn, everything I read, becomes a part of me. Normally, a person who doesn’t have this gift, and who hasn’t studied memory, tends to just forget things—even an entire book. Not me.” Gianni says that his “gift”, or special ability, he has memorized more than 250 books!

Memorizing over 250 books is surprising, but it’s not the only surprising thing about Gianni. He says that he can remember every detail of every day of his life. He also says that he can remember these details from the time he was less than one day old!

Researchers are now studying how memory and learning change the brain. Some research already shows that a great memory may not depend on the right DNA only. It seems that everyone can remember more if they try. According to Dr. Malgaroli, “If you really need to use your brain to store some kind of information, you have this ability. It’s just a matter of exercise.” So, practice and exercising the brain can improve the memory!

The same idea is true for Gianni. His gift is just only part of his success. Since the age of 11, he’s been training his brain to remember more and more. He practices continuously to improve the power of his memory. Gianni thinks about memory, and works on it, all the time. He has even memorized a whole series of historical books!

Gianni believes his memory is mainly because of his very hard work. He even holds classes to teach others how to improve their memories. In his classes, Gianni shows people how to organize their memories and how to “remember to remember”. “I think the only problem with memory is the correct order. There’s a lot of brain space, so I think there are no limits.”

- A. He enjoys reading. B. He is a clever student.
C. He can remember well. D. He connects what he sees.

In the village of Kentucky, there lived a young girl named Amanda. She moved here for only 2 weeks. Her closest friends were far from her. Amanda kept herself busy for hours by walking around the grassy fields nearby, enjoying the natural beauty along them. On the weekend, Amanda would even volunteer on farms to help take care of sheep, cows and horses.

Still, it was easy for Amanda to feel lonely in her big house. One day, just as Amanda was about to leave and spend time walking around, she saw a cat jump onto the porch (门廊). Even though the cat looked dirty, it was beautiful with bright blue eyes.

Amanda's feeling of surprise quickly gave way to a feeling of pity. Thinking of what she could offer the cat, Amanda hurried to the kitchen and prepared two bowls: one filled with fish and the other with water. After sniffing (嗅) them carefully, the cat began to eat the food hungrily. Once it finished its meal, the cat ran away into the thick grass and disappeared.

From that day, the cat would appear on the porch every day in the morning and beg for food and water, and Amanda would always be there ready. Their relationship started to deepen as Amanda enjoyed regularly seeing her new “furry (毛茸茸的) neighbours”. The cat was too nervous to be taken indoors, but it was comfortable with Amanda gradually.

However, one day, everything took a different turn in the morning. Amanda brought a bowl of fish near the porch and waited for the cat as usual, but it didn't appear. The next day, and the day after that, the cat didn't show up either. She stepped into the thick grass where the cat usually went and searched carefully.

Du Mengran, a great Chinese scientist known as “Deep-Sea Diver” by Nature, has become a role model for many young people. She was born in a small city in Shandong Province. From an early age, she was curious about the ocean and often asked her parents questions about sea creatures and the deep sea. This childhood passion planted the seed for her future scientific career.

Du’s love for science led her to study hard. She did well in math and biology at school. After graduating from high school, she went to a famous university to study marine science. During her college years, she not only mastered professional knowledge but also joined the school's marine exploration club. She spent countless weekends in the laboratory, analyzing seawater samples and studying the habits of deep-sea organisms. Even when experiments failed repeatedly, she never lost heart.

Du Mengran's success comes from her hard work. Her work focuses on deep-sea diving and how to explore the ocean. She studies the systems of fluids that seep from the sea floor, and even came up with a new idea about how deep-sea creatures live. This idea has helped make underwater technologies better. Up to December 2025, she has gone on over 30 deep-sea dives. She has used China's own underwater vehicles like “Jiaolong”, “Shenhai Yongshi” and “Fendouzhe”. In 2022, she started a program to explore the deepest parts of the world's oceans. She led teams from China and Indonesia to discover two new hot-water activity areas in the Java Trench. In 2024, she helped create a machine that can read DNA in the deep sea. In 2025, she also tested China's first deep-sea gamma radiation detector.

On December 8th, Du was named one of the 2025 Top 10 Scientists by Nature magazine’s website. This is a great honor for her and Chinese science. Her contributions make the world know more about China’s deep-sea research strength.

Jane Goodall, the world-famous primatologist（灵长类动物学家）and conservationist（环保主义者）, passed away at the age of 91 on October 1, 2025, in California, US. She was on a speaking tour at that time. The Jane Goodall Institute told people about her death. It praised her for changing science and devoting her life to protecting nature.

Goodall was born in London in 1934. When she was a child, she loved animals very much. In 1960, when she was 26, she went to Tanzania's Gombe Stream National Park to study chimpanzees（黑猩猩）—and she didn't even have formal scientific training. Her patience finally brought good results: she became the first person to see chimps make tools. For example, chimps use twigs to "fish" for termites（白蚁）. This discovery changed how humans understand animals. Before that, people thought only humans could make tools.

In the next 60 years, Goodall's research found more interesting facts about chimps: they have different personalities, they feel emotions like joy and sadness, and they form strong family connections. Later in her life, she turned her attention to helping protect the environment around the world. She started the Jane Goodall Institute and set up "Roots and Shoots"—a program that helps young people take action to protect the environment.

“Where's Papa going with that ax (斧头)?” said Fern to her mother as they were setting the table for breakfast.

“He went to the pig house,” replied Mrs Arable. “Some pigs were born last night. ”

“I don’t understand why he needs an ax. ” continued Fern, who was only eight years old.

“Well,” said her mother, “ one of the pigs is a runt (小不点儿). It’s very small and weak, and it will never amount to (成为) anything. So your father has decided to do away with it. ”

Mrs Arable put a pitcher (罐) of cream on the table. “Don’t shout, Fern!” she said. “Your father is right. The pig will die anyway. ”

Fern pushed a chair out of the way and ran outdoors. She caught up with her father.

“Please don’t kill it!” she cried. “It’s unfair. ”

Mr Arable stopped walking.

“Fern,” he said gently, “you will have to learn to control yourself. ”

“Control myself?” shouted Fern. “This is a matter of life and death, but you talk about controlling myself. ” Tears ran down her cheeks and she took hold of the ax and tried to pull it out of her father’s hand.

“Fern,” said Mr Arable, “I know more about raising pigs than you do. A weakling makes trouble. Now go home!”

“But it’s unfair,” cried Fern. “The pig couldn’t help being born small, could it? If I had been very small at birth, would you have killed me?”

Mr Arable smiled. “Certainly not. ” he said, looking down at his daughter with love. “But this is different. A little girl is one thing, while a little runty pig is another. ”

“I see no difference,” replied Fern, still holding on to the ax. “This is the most terrible case of unfairness that I have ever heard. ”

A strange look came over Mr Arable’s face. He seemed almost ready to cry himself.

“All right,” he said. “You go back to the house and I will bring the runt when I come back. I’ll let you look after the baby pig. Then you’ll see what trouble a pig can be. ”

Half an hour later, Mr Arable returned to the house, carrying a box under his arm.

“Put it on her chair!” said Mrs Arable. Mr Arable set the box down at Fern’s place. Fern came slowly down the stairs. Her eyes were red from crying. As she got closer to her chair, the box wobbled (摇晃), and there was a scratching noise. Fern looked at her father. Then she opened the box. There, inside, looking up at her, was the newborn pig. It was a white one. The morning light shone through its ears, turning them pink.

I love to read. I can't even remember when I started loving it. I grew up in a really small and far-away village. Most people there were farmers, and some of them never went to school. My dad somehow got some education. He read a lot and loved reading novels. But he always told me to read textbooks instead.

At first, I was kind of sad. Textbooks didn't seem as interesting as the exciting stories. But I trusted my dad, so I started reading textbooks hard.

Science textbooks let me know about the world around me. I learned how plants grew. This was very useful in our village because most people were farmers. I told the farmers what I learned, like how to plant crops better. At first, they didn't trust me, but later they were surprised because their crops grew better. I was so proud, and I knew that knowledge was really powerful.

When I read English textbooks, it was like opening a new door. I learned new words and grammar rules. With them, I could make sentences to express my ideas. After learning some descriptive words and sentence patterns, I could vividly describe to foreign visitors how the wildflowers dotted the fields like colorful stars in our village.

History textbooks took me to different times and places. I learned what people in the past did, how they solved difficulties, and what the great achievements were. I realized our village's story was just a small part of a long history. This made me deepen my understanding of our village's past.

Because my dad made me read textbooks, I got a good education. I went to an excellent school in the city. The knowledge from textbooks was like a key that opened the door to new chances. It was the base for my growing up. It helped me reach for my dreams, even if they seemed impossible when I was in that small village.

C. History deepens the villagers' understanding of their hometown.
D. The village's history should have an important part in textbooks.

33. What can people learn from the writer's story?

- A. Knowledge helps people make a difference. B. Students shouldn't read storybooks in school.

Every Sunday morning, Amy goes for a walk in a park near her home. Her favourite place is a lake in the center of the park. Every time she walks by the lake, she sees an old lady sitting there with a small cage beside her.

One morning, she was so curious that she walked over to the old lady. As she got closer, Amy could see there were three turtles slowly walking around the bottom of the cage. The old lady was holding a fourth one in her hand and carefully brushing it.

“Excuse me.” Amy said. “May I ask what you’re doing with these turtles?”

Cleaning up the table, I caught sight of small round plastic pieces. I discovered they were the tops or covers of color markers I had kept on the table. The only difference was that someone got those covers and chewed (咀嚼) them into shapelessness. On another part of the table, I saw the color markers dried up without covers. I was almost sure I knew who had done it and I could not understand the reasons behind his actions.

As I was thinking about my discovery, my annoyance and anger gradually went away when I remembered that as a child, I did several strange things that must have made my mother mad. I cut our shoes, I chewed pens and pencils, and I wrote and drew pictures on walls and destroyed many things at home. The mind of a child is curious with the spirit of exploration, trying to understand and test the limits (限制) of many things. Of course, it can be costly, but what is growing up if no mistakes are made?

We call it paying the school fees of life. If a child plays with a hot iron and it burns him, he will probably not go near the iron again. Sometimes I watch the children in my neighborhood playing dangerous games. Sometimes I tell them not to do it, but sometimes I let it pass. Children may not want to be told to stop riding as fast as they want until someone has fallen off their bike. A child will not listen when his parents ask him to get down from the tree until he has fallen down. However, if the behavior is deadly, you should stop it in time.

Creativity is valuable. And this is why we should encourage children to remain creative rather than just receive everything they have known and seen. Allow children to make mistakes, but this must be followed with supervision (监督), monitoring, and correction.
