九、阅读理解

A

During the Tang Dynasty (618—907), Emperor Taizong asked the prime minister (宰相) Feng Deyi to recommend talented people. However, several months passed, Feng didn't recommend anyone.

“I tried my best, but there are not unusual and perfect people at all,” Feng said.

“People are like utensils(器物). What we need to do is to make good use of their strengths. You cannot excuse yourself for not noticing talented people. How could you say that there are no talented people in our country?” said the emperor.

Indeed, each utensil or tool has its use. A knife is made to cut things while chopsticks are made to pick up food. We can't use a knife as a chopstick. Like a utensil, each person has a special strength. Nobody is perfect. We can't expect a person to be good at everything.

With this idea in mind, Emperor Taizong discovered many talented people of different backgrounds. He offered them important positions, which helped them make the best use of their talents. His talented people helped the society develop and created a “golden age”.

A good example is Ma Zhou, who grew up in a poor family. Ma gave a lot of useful advice, so Emperor Taizong offered him a position and promoted him many times. Ma helped the emperor deal with many difficult things and became a well-known person in history.

Chang Sheng, a Chinese teacher, says if a person is talented in one way, we should give them a chance. The same idea can be found in the Analects of Confucius (《论语》). Treating people as utensils shows that we can not only lead people well, but also allow different kinds of people to work well. President Xi Jinping once told this story to officials, asking them to value talented people.

Today, as our work is being divided more and more clearly, the idea still makes sense. If we become leaders someday, we should help others give full play to their strengths. For example, Liu Bang, the founder of Han Dynasty (206BC—AD220), let Zhang Liang and Xiao He work as advisors for their wisdom while inviting Han Xin to lead the army for his war strategies. Known as the “three heroes of the early Han Dynasty”, they helped Liu build a strong dynasty.

1. Why couldn't Feng Deyi find any talented people in Taizong's opinion?

- A. There were no talented people then.
- B. He was afraid of being taken instead.
- C. Something was wrong with his standards.
- D. He wasn't satisfied with the emperor.

2. Ma Zhou is a good example of people who _____.

- A. have no talent but are still useful
- B. are unusual and perfect
- C. know when to take a chance
- D. show talent in the right field

3. What might be Chang Sheng's opinion?

- A. People with any talent should be valued.
- B. Talented people are difficult to discover.
- C. Using people as tools is a very wise way.
- D. Using people as tools doesn't work today.

4. What is the main idea of the story?

- A. Chances only come to those who are well prepared.
- B. Talented people should be valued and put in the right place.
- C. A good horse needs to be discovered by wise men.
- D. A great talent also needs the great will to succeed.

九、阅读理解

During the Tang Dynasty (618—907), Emperor Taizong asked the prime minister (宰相) Feng Deyi to recommend talented people. However, several months passed, Feng didn’t recommend anyone.

“I tried my best, but there are not unusual and perfect people at all,” Feng said.

“People are like utensils(器物). What we need to do is to make good use of their strengths. You cannot excuse yourself for not noticing talented people. How could you say that there are no talented people in our country?” said the emperor.

Indeed, each utensil or tool has its use. A knife is made to cut things while chopsticks are made to pick up food. We can’t use a knife as a chopstick. Like a utensil, each person has a special strength. Nobody is perfect. We can’t expect a person to be good at everything.

With this idea in mind, Emperor Taizong discovered many talented people of different backgrounds. He offered them important positions, which helped them make the best use of their talents. His talented people helped the society develop and created a “golden age”.

A good example is Ma Zhou, who grew up in a poor family. Ma gave a lot of useful advice, so Emperor Taizong offered him a position and promoted him many times. Ma helped the emperor deal with many difficult things and became a well-known person in history.

Chang Sheng, a Chinese teacher, says if a person is talented in one way, we should give them a chance. The same idea can be found in the Analects of Confucius (《论语》). Treating people as utensils shows that we can not only lead people well, but also allow different kinds of people to work well. President Xi Jinping once told this story to officials, asking them to value talented people.

Today, as our work is being divided more and more clearly, the idea still makes sense. If we become leaders someday, we should help others give full play to their strengths. For example, Liu Bang, the founder of Han Dynasty (206BC—AD220), let Zhang Liang and Xiao He work as advisors for their wisdom while inviting Han Xin to lead the army for his war strategies. Known as the “three heroes of the early Han Dynasty”, they helped Liu build a strong dynasty.

1. Why couldn't Feng Deyi find any talented people in Taizong's opinion?

- A. There were no talented people then.
- B. He was afraid of being taken instead.
- C. Something was wrong with his standards.
- D. He wasn't satisfied with the emperor.

2. Ma Zhou is a good example of people who _____.

- A. have no talent but are still useful
- B. are unusual and perfect
- C. know when to take a chance
- D. show talent in the right field

3. What might be Chang Sheng's opinion?

- A. People with any talent should be valued.
- B. Talented people are difficult to discover.
- C. Using people as tools is a very wise way.
- D. Using people as tools doesn't work today.

4. What is the main idea of the story?

- A. Chances only come to those who are well prepared.
- B. Talented people should be valued and put in the right place.
- C. A good horse needs to be discovered by wise men.
- D. A great talent also needs the great will to succeed.

【答案】1. C 2. D 3. A 4. B
