As a university student, I decided to learn French. For some reason I really liked the language, but I was not very good at learning it. The grammar _____ 1 _____ me a lot and even drove me crazy. My only advantage was _____ 2 _____—I got an A in every word test I took. After two years of studies, I struggled to communicate in _____ 3 _____ French and signed up to study in France to complete my degree. It was the _____ 4 _____ term I would ever have.

The moment I arrived in France, I felt like I was starting from scratch (从头开始). The French I'd learned in university wasn't practical for everyday conversations. It is difficult for me to get around, read emails and talk with my classmates. I was often nervous at school, worried about _____ 5 _____ I could understand my teachers in class. I only _____ 6 _____ a little around my eight roommates, who were willing to speak French slowly to me and didn't seem to mind my _____ 7 _____.

I chose to study three courses—reading & writing, grammar and history. The history class was a big challenge for me. The teacher spoke so _____ 8 _____ that almost everything he said flew right over my head. I sat in the front, took notes and even recorded every single word he said in class, but _____ 9 _____ helped. I had no idea what the class was really about. Years have passed, but I never forget how hard _____ 10 _____ was for me to manage to get my degree. I think my failure that term taught me just as much as my success.
